He entered one of the adjoining houses and went up on the roof, and from thence down the scuttle. He found all the doors closed, and looking into the sle apartment, he found the sheets and blankets turned down as it he had just risen He then went down to the basement, and on opening the door found his brother lying dead upon the carpet passing into the ment. He found that the window had been broken open, and he became convinced at once that his brother had been brutally murdered. A pane of glass in the window had been broken so that a man might insert his hand and turn the fastenings. The theory is that some thief was aware of the fact that Goodrich was in the habit of sleeping in this house alone, and supposed that he carried considerable money about him; that he broke into the place, and Goodrich hearing a noise came down stairs, pistol in hand ready to meet the intruder; the thief took up a position from which he could knock senseless as he entered the place, and it is believed, struck him a blow above the right eye; this blow was sufficient to render him powerless, and the thief then seized his pistol and shot him. Then the fellow undoubtedly rifled his pockets, for his pocket-book, as well as his valuable gold watch was gone. There was nothing about the place to give evidence of a struggle having occurred, but the posi-tion in which the body was found would lead a casual observer to infer that he had committed suicide. The pistol, a silver-plated revolver, was lying near his right hand. A pool of co-
